

ABSTRACT

A display system for a shopping mall or retail store environment includes a platform, a plurality of kiosks mounted on the platform, each of the kiosks including a base, a raised drum having a plurality of lights arranged in two concentric sets, and at least three panels illuminated by the lights and disposed between the base and the drum and extending radially outwardly from a central vertical axis, a podium disposed adjacent the platform and defining a workstation, a first spar connecting the drum of a first kiosk with the drum of a second kiosk, and a second spar connecting the drum of the first kiosk with the podium, with each of the first and second spars including a first end, a second end, and an uninterrupted display surface extending from adjacent the first end to adjacent the second end, the display surface arranged to receive indicia, each of the first and second spars further arranged to support electrical cable to thereby permit an electrical connection between each of the kiosks and the podium.